ALLEN W. DULLES

WASHINGTON (INS) — Central intelligence Director Allen W. Dulles says "the world is in ferment" and Russia's rulers seem to have returned "to the days of ruthless Stalinism."

The nation's intelligence chief, making one of his rare public appearances, said the free world faces "acute crises" in Egypt and other Arab states. He said similar crucial situations exist in Hungary and Poland.

Dulles, in an address before the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, cited four top global problems in connection with his statement that "to say that the world is in ferment is to put it mildly."

He enumerated the problems as:

1. "Revolt against the last vestiges of colonialism."
2. "Uprising within the satellite states of Europe against Moscow domination."
3. "The all-out attempt by the communist bloc to sell its theories and its wares throughout what we call the uncommitted areas of the world."
4. "The conflict between the free world and its program of building up a society based on the principles of freedom and the attempt by the communist bloc to make over the world in its image."

Dulles declined to predict the outcome of the middle east crisis.

But, he said, the U.S. knows "with reasonable accuracy the hardware which the various contestants in the middle east have available to put into the struggle if the uneasy ceasefire should be broken."

Dulles added that in the case of Hungary, the U.S. "knew what forces the soviet had available and approximately where they were located to throw into that country to put down the spontaneous uprising of those brave people if the soviet finally elected, as they did, to take the course of ruthless oppression."
